Tricho-rhino-phalangeal syndrome (TRPS) is an autosomal dominant syndrome with systemic manifestations, comprising short stature, malformations of the face and hands, dental abnormalities, and skeletal abnormalities. The purpose of this study was to evaluate the nutritional status of an adolescent with TRPS, by means of bioelectrical impedance. The electrical body impedance was measured at six different frequencies (1, 5, 50, 200, 500 and 1,000 kHz) and then the values were compared with those of five healthy subjects. The patient's body weight was 61.4 kg (BMI = 17.1), and the values obtained for the relative body fat were 23.3%, 16.3% and 15.6% at 1, 5 and 50 kHz, respectively, but these values were not different from those of the healthy subjects, which were 21.8%, 17.7% and 17.3%, respectively. The values of resistance (R) at frequencies of 1, 5, 50, 200, 500 and 1,000 kHz were greater than those of the control subjects, which were 13.0, 35.5, 6.5, 15.9, 76.5 and 31.3 kOhm, respectively. The values of reactance (X) and phase angle at frequencies of 1, 5 and 50 kHz were lower than those of the control subjects, which were 7.3, 5.8 and 3.8 Ohm.cm² and 0.22, 1cdb36666d
